

Time with loved ones

If you knew the world was nigh how would you spend your last day?

Some comments from the Whangarei Leader Facebook page:

Tammy D'Ath - With my family.

Ange Peck - With my loved ones.

Steve Marshall - It depends how nigh. The sun should go for another five billion years before morphing into a red giant. It's way too early for making last-day plans for that event. But if I really knew the end of the world was next-day-nigh, I guess I'd be spending it with my crackpot cult buddies.

Warren Slater - Spend up large on a credit card, never really done that ... oh, and read the Whangarei Leader of course ... Seriously, I would spend the day with my family and pets, comforting them to the end and sharing the happy memories we've built together AND wouldn't it be nice if we all embraced one person that was on their own or have not got family.
